Field Update from Sumatra

In our January 2014 newsletter, AES announced our 3 year commitment to the Veterinary Society for Sumatran Wildlife Conservation (VSSWIC). We would like to share an update on a couple of elephant projects from our VSSWIC partners.

The Sumatran elephant is listed by the International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN) as critically endangered, but every birth gives us hope for the future of this species. On January 16, 2014 at the Way Kambas Elephant Conservation Center, the elephant Mela, gave birth to a healthy male calf weighing approximately 200 pounds.

This was Mela's second calf. Unfortunately, she attacked and killed her first calf in 2011 immediately after it was born. This time she was a bit nervous, but remained reasonably calm towards the calf. After a short time she accepted the calf and allowed it to nurse. Two months later, she has adapted well to her role as a mother and the calf is doing well.

Back in November 2013, a female calf was rescued from the wild with a serious wire snare injury to her front left leg. VESSWIC provided the medical supplies for her treatment and is also providing food and milk supplements. They are happy to report that the calf, named Yekti, is also doing well.

Human-elephant conflict (HEC) is still a growing problem for both humans and elephant in Sumatra, Indonesia. In January VESSWIC Elephant Healthcare Program veterinarians assisted the Nature Conservation Agency and Frankfurt Zoological Society and fitted two wild elephants with GPS collars. This is part of an HEC monitoring program that is being conducted in the Bukit Tiga Puluh forest area in the province of Jambi.

By working together, we can make a difference in the health, welfare, and conservation of elephants in Asian range countries. AES is proud to support these dedicated individuals who are working hard every day.

A New Volunteer for AES

Wrylie has been working for the Topeka Zoo for about six years, three of which have been with elephants. She started there as an intern in high school. Her love for elephants developed at an early age with books and stories but also getting to see the two elephants at the Topeka Zoo. She wanted to get involved with AES because of our projects in range countries. She was willing to help in any way she could, and she has had training in web development and maintains the Topeka Zoo website, so it was a perfect match for her to help with our website. Wrylie's help has already proven invaluable and we're incredibly grateful that she is willing to extend her expertise for our benefit. Welcome, Wrylie! We're so glad to have you on board.
